Portion of Mill

BETHLEHEM, Apr. 28.—(INS)—

The four masked men who broke into the Gallia Silk Corporation's plant at Fountain Hill, near here, early today, binding and blindfolding Miles Vandoren, the 50-year old watchman, failed to obtain any loot a check-up revealed today.

It had been reported that the quartet carried away 12 bales of raw silk, valued at $13,000, but the silk later was reported found in another part of the plant.

Apparently the men had been frightened before they could load the waiting truck.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Apr. 28.—(INS)—

Four masked bandits bound the watchman of the Gallia Silk Corporation mill at Fountain Hill near here early today and escaped with $13,000 worth of raw silk.

The watchman, Miles Van Doren, 50, was tied up and forced to sit by while the quartet loaded the silk onto a truck and drove away. Doren freed himself a short time later and gave the alarm. Descriptions of the men were broadcast immediately throughout the Lehigh Valley and as far south as Philadelphia.

The robbers carted away 12 bales of 34 they found in two huge concrete vaults. They left 15 bales on a loading platform outside the plant and four others just inside as they were forced to leave hurriedly to escape being detected by the guards, that visit the plant each morning with a truck that makes daily calls at the plant.

Given Shower in Honor of Approaching Wedding

Mrs. James Cullen, of Cedar street, and Miss Nan Ennis, of Maple street, gave a miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Katharine Dafter, of Olney, which was held at the home of Mrs. Cullen, on Saturday evening. The marriage of Miss Dafter to Charles Cullen will take place on June 25th.

Friends gathered at the Cullen home, early Saturday evening, and when Miss Dafter arrived, she was completely surprised. The various packages had been fastened to a clothes-tree and a rain-coat wrapped around them. Over the clothes-tree hung an open umbrella. Miss Dafter was obliged to remove the umbrella and raincoat and open all the packages. She received many beautiful and useful gifts. Afterwards, games, singing and dancing took place, followed by refreshments. The dining room was prettily decorated with pink and white crepe paper streamers and a bouquet of cut flowers formed the center-piece on the table. Those who enjoyed this delightful affair were:

SILVER-TONGUED ORATOR WILL SPEAK IN BRISTOL

Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard
To Tell of the Mormons
At Two Meetings

ONE FOR WOMEN ONLY

The "silver-tongued orator of the Rockies," Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard, is to give two addresses in Bristol during the next few days. The first of her speeches is to be upon "The Mormon Misuse of the Bible," and will be delivered in the Bristol M. E. Church, Wednesday at 7.45 p. m. The second session, a meeting for women only, will be held in the Bristol Presbyterian Church, Thursday afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock, at which time she will speak of "The Mormon Temple Secrets."

Believing that "the persistent growth in political power and influence of Mormonism has created a situation that calls for serious study by those patriots who recognize the Christian institutions of America as vital to the nation's present greatness and its assurance of future existence," Mrs. Shepard is giving her message to hundreds weekly.

It is under the auspices of the National Reform Association that this one who has an intimate knowledge of her subjects, due to the fact that she lived for years in Salt Lake City, comes to Bristol. She has stated she feels it her patriotic duty to tell the nation of "the history, treachery and iniquity of the Mormons." For 12 years she was president of the Utah State W. C. T. U., and twice under her leadership a dry legislature was elected. She has spoken in practically every state in the union to large and enthusiastic audiences.

She has been aptly described as: "Radiating with pep—breezy as her West, short, plump and quick; with dark hair inclined to be quite curly; a jolly face, squarish chin and dancing blue eyes that look shrewdly through narrowed lids, but which can glint with a steely hardness upon excuse." Large audiences are expected to attend these two meetings which will be addressed by one of America's greatest speakers, who has capacity crowds wherever she goes.

LADIES TO MEET

Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Church will meet tonight at the home of Mrs. Lewis Trude, 1409 Pond street, and all members are urged to be present.

TWO CHURCH EDIFICES IN HULMEVILLE ARE SYMBOLIC OF YEARS OF SERVICE TO THAT COMMUNITY, EACH HAVING STEADY GROWTH

Band of Folks Which Formed Nucleus for Each Denomination Held Meetings in Early Days in the Public School House; Organizations Flourish

Herewith is presented the fourth installment of an interesting and informative article concerning the Borough of Hulmeville. It will be continued from day to day until completed.

One edifice in the town of Hulmeville is the Neshaminy Methodist Episcopal Church, located on Main street. Before the days of 1840 the Hulmeville Methodists conducted cottage prayer services, and carried on the religious work of the denomination as best they could under adverse circumstances. A charter was granted to the band in 1842, and meetings were held in the Trenton avenue school house, which structure is now occupied as a private residence by Miss Lena Schoenfeld.

Some months later, or in 1844, a church building was erected near the line that divides Newportville and Hulmeville. This structure of stone is still standing, and is at present occupied in the summer season as a residence by Philadelphia people. Residents of Hulmeville and Newportville, as well as many from the surrounding countryside, attended this church for years.

As the Borough of Hulmeville continued to grow, rather slow but sure, a need was found for a church to be located nearer the center of the town. Thus it was in 1904 that the present edifice was commenced, a frame structure, adjoining the public school property. The building contains an auditorium of ample size, a Sunday School room, and a social hall on the basement floor.

The Rev. W. Vernon Middleton was assigned to this church as pastor in the fall of 1928. Just at the close of his last conference year here, he was ordained an elder, at a service in Philadelphia. At present he is a student at Drew Theological Seminary. During its years of service in the community there have been two young men of the church who have gone to foreign countries to serve in the mission field, namely, J. Theron Illick and C. Raymond Illick, sons of the late Rev. Hiram Illick, who for a few years served as pastor of the Neshaminy Church, and who later lived a retired life in the borough. J. Theron Illick is at present located with his family at Nanking, China, where he is teaching in a university. He has been located in China for some years. Dr. C. Raymond Illick was for several years stationed in Mexico, working in the medical mission field. At present he is practicing medicine in California.

There are five organizations, all very active, connected with the M. E. Church. These organizations and their officers are:

Official Board: Edwin W. Henry, Sr., president; Jesse C. Everitt, secretary; Jesse G. Webster, financial secretary; Samuel J. Illick, treasurer.

Women's Home Missionary Society: Miss Ella Dunford, president; Mrs. Charles Haefner, vice-president; Mrs. Jesse C. Everitt, evangelistic secretary; Mrs. Emma Vansant, secretary; Mrs. Horace Cox, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Edwin W. Henry, Sr., treasurer.

The Ladies' Aid Society, comprising about 50 members, is served by the following: Mrs. Jesse C. Everitt, president; Mrs. Samuel Black, vice-president; Mrs. Jesse G. Webster, secretary; Mrs. Ashbel Buckman, treasurer. Meetings are held every four weeks.

The Epworth League of the church was chartered in the year 1894, and is just entering its 37th year. There are approximately 60 members. Officers elected this month include: President, Miss Elma E. Haefner; first vice-president, Charles Smith; second vice-president, Arthur Kaufman; third vice-president, Miss Harriet Cox; fourth vice-president, Miss Elizabeth Foster; secretary, Miss Florence Everitt; treasurer, Miss Clara L. Illick. The Junior League has been conducted for some time by Miss Adeline E. Reetz, superintendent. There are 35 boys and girls who are members, the weekly meetings being well attended. Isidore Jenne

NOW ON WEDDING TOUR

A beautiful church wedding took place Sunday afternoon at 2.30 in St. Ann's Catholic Church, when Miss Anna Mari, daughter of Mr. Louis Mari, of 691 Garden street, was married to Michael Capriotti, son of Mr. and Mrs. Enrico Capriotti, of 438 Jefferson avenue.

The bride was attended by the following persons: Miss Viola Capriotti, sister of the groom, as maid of honor; Mrs. Rose Adione, of Brooklyn, N. Y., sister of the groom, Miss Josephine Casmarri, of Colonial avenue, and Miss Adele Nepa, of Lincoln avenue, as bridesmaids. Eleanor Nepa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Nepa, of Jefferson avenue and Elizabeth Nepa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Nepa, of Lincoln avenue, were flower girls. William Rago, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carlo Rago, of Mansion street, and Theresa Nepa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Nepa, of Jefferson avenue, were dressed as little bride and groom, and the little maid of honor was Philomena Adione, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adione, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The groom was attended by his brother, Harry Capriotti, and Michael Ventero, of Bristol, and Joseph Adione, of Brooklyn.

The bride wore a white satin gown made bodice effect with shirring, sleeveless, low neck, and the skirt was long in the back and shorter in the front. A bouquet of orange blossoms and a panel of white lace was the trimming on the left side of the bride's costume. With this was worn white satin slippers, silk stockings, and a lace veil made crown shape trimmed with pearls, and rhinestones and she carried a bouquet of white roses.

Miss Capriotti, the maid of honor, was attired in a light green satin gown, made bodice effect, sleeveless, low-neck and the skirt ended in the uneven hemline. She wore slippers, stockings and Greta Garbo hat to match and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

The bridesmaids' dresses were all made alike, in different colors, Mrs. Adione wearing yellow satin; Miss Casmarri, attired in peach satin and Miss Nepa in rose satin. These dresses were made with the tight-fitting bodice and sleeveless and the skirts were long with hemlines ending in points. They wore Greta Garbo hats and carried arm bouquets of roses to match their dresses.

The flower girls wore pretty little dresses of yellow crepe de-chine, made plain, with Bertha collar. They wore white slippers, yellow socks, rhinestone bands around their hair and carried small baskets filled with flowers. The little bride looked sweet in a white crepe-de-chine dress trimmed with ruffles, and she wore white slippers and stockings, veil and carried a bouquet of flowers. FATALLY STRICKEN AS HE MAKES SPEECH HERE

Vincent Cioci, 55, Eddington, Dies Suddenly While Attending Meeting

CAUSED BY EXCITEMENT

Making a passionate plea for members of the Order of Sons of Italy, here, yesterday morning, an active worker in the organization, Vincent Cioci, 55, of Eddington, suddenly halted his speech, said "Excuse me," sat down in a chair and leaning forward died.

The meeting was held in Trades Hall here at 10 o'clock and the attendance limited to members of the Order of Sons of Italy was held in the interest of a membership drive. There were a number of visitors from other branches of the order, and Cioci, who is a member of Lodge No. 77, of Philadelphia, came here to aid in enthusiasm to enlist new members in their organization.

Angelo DiRenzo, Bristol, was acting as chairman of the meeting and after he had concluded his opening remarks he called upon Cioci. The speaker arose and had talked for about fifteen minutes when apparently he felt faint. He halted his talk and begged to be excused. Cioci then stepped back a short distance to a chair which was upon the platform. He sat down and leaned forward resting his head upon his hands on the back of the chair in front of him.

Seeing that Cioci was suffering, men went to his assistance and a nurse and physician were summoned. Death occurred before either arrived.

The meeting was immediately adjourned and word was dispatched to Cioci's wife and two children, one aged 17 and one 13.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young was called and said that death was due to heart trouble aggravated by Cioci's excitement over pleading the cause of his countrymen.

The body was removed to an undertaking establishment and then later taken to the home of the deceased at Eddington, six miles below here.

BRISTOL YOUTH, 12, WINS HONORS AS GOOD SPELLER

Albert Goldman Receives
First Prize in Co. Contest
At Doylestown

DEFEATS MANY RIVALS

"Tenement" Was the Word
Which Sent Girl Down
To Defeat

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 28.—Although they were outnumbered nineteen to ten by the girl contestants of the annual Bucks County spelling championship conducted in the Court House by J. Harry Hoffman, county superintendent of schools, a 12-year-old boy, Albert Goldman, of the Bristol borough schools, was crowned champion speller and received the first prize.

Goldman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Goldman, of Mill street, and is a student in the eighth grade.

The contest this year was conducted among grammar school students from every section of the county. A champion was selected to represent each district, and when the contest started Friday twenty-nine district champions came to the front in the "battle of words."

It was the word "tenement" that was mis-spelled by Mary Ament, aged 14, of Danboro, representing the Plumstead township district, that sent her out of the competition as a finalist and won the crown for Albert Goldman. The Bristol youth was called upon to spell the last word and he did it correctly and won the prize. Mary was awarded second prize.

Third honors went to Marjorie E. Waite, aged 14, of Welsel, who represented the East Rockhill district. The second-prize winner mis-spelled "belfry" and the third prize winner went out on the word "epitaph."

This year's contest conducted entirely by the office of the County Superintendent of Schools was very satisfactory. The contestants were fully acquainted with the rules before the contest started and no disputes arose this year during the contest.

Close to 200 persons, including many of the parents and teachers followed the contestants to Doylestown and showed a keen interest in the contest.

Representing the Doylestown school district was "Billy" Power, aged 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Power, who went through the competition in good shape until near the closing rounds when he mis-spelled "retrieve" and had to retire from further competition.

All told twenty-eight words were missed by the contestants. It took thirteen rounds and over 200 words to complete the contest.

Among the words that were not spelled correctly were the following: Interrupt, millinery, poisonous, slaughter, mischievous, accordion, melodeon, opulent, sycamore, axiom, accommodate, miscellaneous, occurrence, acclamation, perpetrate, alms, retrieve, dilemma, sleigh, slinew, strychnine, arsenal, promissory, abscess, reinforcement, epitaph, belfry and tenement.

SOUVENIR HUNTING

Souvenir hunting has a history, to which this generation has no intention of writing finis.

Three centuries ago the local Indians stole scalps as souvenirs of happy moments spent among the paleface settlers. A century later the more enterprising of the settlers were seizing ships. By some they were called pirates, by others patriots. A hundred years ago the souvenir-hunting fever ran to effigies of congressmen. Today it runs to everything.

Nothing is safe from this ubiquitous pest. Wrecked automobiles are quickly dismantled. Epoch-making airplanes must be protected against them. Lindbergh's shirts seldom come back from the laundry. Home-run baseballs and balls hit into the bleachers never return to the playing field. Hotels and pullman cars keep the nation supplied with towels, linen and useful little knick-knacks.

Plymouth Rock was being chipped away to nothingness until a steel barrier was built around it. The federal government must be constantly on guard against souvenir-hunting vandals who knock chips from monuments and public buildings. Not even the monuments on the Gettysburg battlefield are safe.

When the souvenir craze hits a citizen he usually loses all reason, morality, honesty, honor, sentiment and discretion. He seeks to justify his purloinings and spoils by the strange logic that the taking of that possessed of only commemorative or sentimental value cannot be stealing.

The incurable stage has arrived when hotels must chain fast their Gideon Bibles.

FAMILY CASH

Forty-one per cent of the wealth of the United States is in the hands of women, financial statisticians estimate. This includes real estate, stocks, bonds and cash in bank. That places womanhood as an important "prospect" for banks and investment brokers.

Theoretically, then, fifty-nine per cent of the wealth is owned by men. Theoretically is used advisedly, for if the pay checks issued to husbands and bank accounts in their names were credited to the wives who really control them, the percentages would be reversed.

Poor man! He is in a sorer condition than the figures indicate, disconcerting though they are. How far off is the time when husbands will be arguing indignantly with their wives for a generous allowance, instead of doling money out to their wives in grudging spirit.

Uxorial reaction to this possibility is that it would serve the "old tightwads" good. The housewife's chronic complaint is that men will never learn that it takes more than cigar money to operate the house.

No doubt modern conditions have created new causes for domestic strife and divorces, but the good old reliable home-wrecker is the inadequate domestic budget and the "provider" who demands choice cuts on pin money.

Canadian soft-drink dealers are skeptical of the report that 4,000,000 Americans spent $75 each in Canada last summer.

After the wedding ceremony, a reception was held in St. Ann's Hall on Logan street, which about 300 guests attended. The hall was decorated with palms and flowers and the music was furnished by a local orchestra. The bride and groom had a wedding cake weighing 75 pounds, which was beautifully decorated.

Mr. and Mrs. Capriotti left late last evening for a honeymoon to be spent in New York and Washington. They will be away one week. The bride, when she went away, was attired in a dark peach shadow lace and georgette dress, light tan slippers and stockings, and green hat and coat. Upon their return, the happy couple will live at 690 Mansion street. Mrs. Capriotti was born and raised in Bristol, attended both the public and parochial unanimous expression of public opinion, Governor Fisher turned to the man whom he knew had the best interests of the State at heart and appointed him to fill the Senate vacancy.

The bride and groom received many beautiful wedding gifts. Guests attending the wedding were from Bristol, Holmesburg, Trenton, Conestoga and Brooklyn.

"Senator Grundy has demonstrated during his short incumbency of the Senate seat that he can protect the tariff and at this time no change should be made in the occupancy of that office.

Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, of Pittsburgh, is attempting to sell to the voters of Pennsylvania promises and pledges, whereas Senator Grundy has a record of activity and accomplishment on which to seek the Senatorial nomination.

"In view of the fact that Secretary

Davis comes from a section of the State that is already represented—the Pittsburgh area—we view his contest for the nomination as tantamount to an effort to unseat Senator David A. Reed in the future.

"It has been the custom in the past to choose our two Senators from widely separated sections of the State, so that the dual viewpoint of Pennsylvania may be taken to Washington. The Philadelphia area from general territorial locations in the past have been recognized by the Republican electorate as the logical place to place one representative for the United States Senate.

"The Davis candidacy is a request, furthermore, to exchange a promise to do the best he can for proven, competent services of a man who is already in the Senate. We feel we would be ingrates, indeed, if we did not support Mr. Grundy after his splendid record. We are, therefore, organizing to support a man who has already proven his leadership.

"The women of Pennsylvania have come to recognize the necessity of concentrated efforts in election divisions if true expression is to be given their influences upon public officers. No man of national reputation has a better appreciation of the viewpoint of those who thus work than Senator Grundy.

"With the exception of one election and despite manifold activities and interests in which he is concerned Senator Grundy held his window book on election day in the precinct in which he resides. This gives him a keen appreciation of the problems of Republican men and women who represent their party in election activities.

"Senator Grundy understands all the problems of the Nation and the State to such a remarkable extent that we feel that the women voters of Pennsylvania will back him to the limit and will fight courageously for a man who has fulfilled more than he has ever promised."

SYNOPSIS
Following the death of the diplomatic mother of Stella Blackney, who had taken him in and cared for him after he had been robbed of his savings during a drunken debauch, David Wade is unable to refuse her request to take her away with him to a South Sea island where they can trade with the natives. Stella is secretly married to O'Shane, the man who robbed Wade. She detests and fears him, knowing his will claim his rights when her mother dies. Her mother does die, and Stella beseeches Wade to take her away. They sail secretly.

CHAPTER IV—Continued
"The mission man said many times that suppose a man and a woman they live together and they not married, then by and by they all burned up in a big fire. A very big fire. And it never go out, that big fire. Maybe the mission man did not speak true words. I do not know. I am frightened they are true words."

"And Dolobe—what did he say?"

Once more Lo-oru hesitated. "He said he not think you and master are married, proper married," she said, speaking rapidly, as though eager to get finished a disagreeable speech. "He should not have speake like that, snabada, and I should not have listened. But I could not help listening. And I have feared for you. Feared—ah, yes!"

Stella laughed. So that was the great secret! Then a feeling of tenderness for Lo-oru came over her. That the crew suspected the real relationship between their master and mistress meant little. That this little brown-skinned half-savage should be so concerned for her meant a great deal. It was on a par with her action that day of the swimming. It was all on a par with the lovingness surrounding her on this love-boat. In an access of emotional response she drew Lo-oru to her and held the small brown body close to her own.

And so day after day they made their southern course, till one noon there showed ahead a line of land, a thin line low to the water, with upon it a blur of palm-tops and above it and about it the quiver and the haze of heat and the sea.

"Motogaru!" cried Manua as he steered.

The day was bright as only a tropical day knows how to be bright. The directly overhead sun flared and sparkled to the crinkling of the sea. There was life in that flash and sparkle—rejoicing life. Ahead and on either side were irregular areas of reef, with a half tide exposing the number of coral knobs rounded like men's heads, and the grass-green of growths like antlers just beneath the water and awash. The passage which Dolobe's sharp eyes discovered, and which by wavings of his brown arm he directed Manua to follow, was a passage so vagrant of direction that repeatedly it threatened to come to a dead end, and yet opened always into a blue way threading further the labyrinth of growing rock.

Soon the lagoon lay before them, and the major details of the land. Stella thrilled as she looked. It was a beautiful island.

But she read in it more than mere beauty. In that loveliness she saw sweet invitation and expressed promise of abiding happiness and rest. One could not be other than happy there, she thought. She likened the winging of the cutter towards it as to the homing of a great, white, wandering bird.

"Our island, David—ours!" she said softly.

He was standing beside her, studying the shore through binoculars, and he nodded more or less casually.

"It seems all right," he said. "The coconut-palms seem to be quite as numerous as the crew-boys said. I think we are in luck. If the islanders are willing to trade, we shall have things all our own way."

Stella laughed gay reproach. "You are a practical old thing! So matter of fact!"

"It is just as well to be assured that we can make a living, isn't it?" he said. "We have to look to the future, you know."

"Of course! But I can't help feeling romantic at this moment."

She liked this practical quality in him. He was a man to be trusted. He would keep his word, do what he had undertaken to do. These clear-eyed men were like that.

Soon they were at the end of the tortuous channel. The depths of the inner water showed distinct against the containing walls of the reef. In the brightness the lagoon was a great blue jewel. The brown thatch of a village came into view among the green of the palms. It appeared slowly, discreetly, like a shy girl. On the beach before it the figure of a man spear-fishing showed as a pole driven upright in the sand.

Stella slipped a hand within Wade's arm. The future was filled with promise for her. Indeed, as the cutter swung in to the anchorage and the sails came creasing down, the things of the present became presaging of happiness to come.

So vivacious was her mood that she confessed to Wade, eagerness to set feet on that inviting beach, and run along it and sing and dance.

"And so you shall," he told her. Then, with sudden gravity, he put an arm about her and said:

"There is a serious side to this business, you know. O'Shane will make every effort to find us. Perhaps he will succeed. We can't remain hidden for ever. Have you thought of that?"

"Of course I have! Heaps of times, and—"

"And what?"

"I am not afraid of being discovered."

She no longer feared him who was her husband by law. Her love for Wade had altered all that. This big new thing that had come to her had relegated fear of O'Shane far to the background of her emotional consciousness. Love had conquered fear. One emotion has subjugated another.

"Bother O'Shane!" she cried. He nodded approvingly.

"I am glad you are so courageous."

She regarded him tenderly.

"It is not courage," she murmured. "It is just that I can't help it."

The anchor rumbled overside and went splashing down.

They had arranged that Wade was to make a preliminary examination of the island, and that, if he found the natives peaceful and the place generally satisfactory, to return and take Stella ashore for a detailed inspection in company. So, after a hurried meal in the shade of an awning spread above the after-deck, David had a small boat lowered. Taking Dolobe with him to row, he entered it.

"Come back as quickly as you can!" Stella called to him. "Remember I am impatient to set foot on our island."

"It may not be at all as suitable as we imagine," he warned. "It would be just as well to be prepared for disappointment. The appearance of land seen from the sea is often very deceiving, you know."

"I know it will be suitable," she cried confidently.

He replied with a wave of the hand, and the small boat moved off. She thought how fine and manly he looked sitting there in the tiny craft. Then she went below, into the cabin, to dress for the shore.

It was quiet in the cabin; there was only the faint rustling of the water, and the voices of Manua and Lo-oru talking somewhere forward. She opened a suitcase and considered what to wear. All manner of gay songs flitted through her head. She wanted to look nice. It was necessary that she looked nice. This was a day of days—the ending of one adventure and the beginning of another. She weighed the merits and demerits of various clothes. She was quite excited. It was like dressing for a ball, or a party.

She pulled on a pair of white stockings, then white shoes. The mirror showed the effect as satisfactory. David would think her most attractive. She put a touch of powder on her cheeks and arranged her hair. Then she put away the other clothes and began tidying the table. The fragments of the gay songs in her head came to her lips.

Then came the sound of a craft scraping alongside. David had been remarkably quick, she thought; and, picking up her wide-brimmed sun hat she ran up on deck. And there she stood and stared.

It was neither David nor his boat. It was a native canoe, manned by six men, brown-skinned and near nude, and, standing in the stern, at the steer-oar, was a girl—a white girl in a dress of flimsy-colored cloth, bareheaded, with long black hair tumbled in the wind.

Janet — the flying stenographer

by JULIE ANNE MOORE
AUTHOR of Mary Della

Fascinating Love Story of a Young Girl

LIFE'S cantankerous!

Meaning that when you think you're on the skids and losing ground, everything comes pouring your way. Ever notice it?

Yes, the reverse is also true; but why bring that up?

The point is that fate is always cooking up a little surprise for us glib mortals, and in the case of Janet Decker it was a surprise with a number of agreeable features.

Janet, you see, was discouraged. She thought about suicide; but not for long. She thought about running away from it all, and filed the idea for future reference. She thought about getting married and laughed right out loud.

She laughed so loud, in fact, that she looked up quickly expecting to meet Miss Miller's disapproving frown. But (praise heaven!) Miss Miller was at lunch; and the laugh was lost in a sweeping return of depression.

Janet got up from her desk and went to the wash room to look for dark rings under her eyes. Worry did that to you, didn't it? Well, maybe, but there weren't any dark rings under Janet's eyes.

The mirror reflected nothing more alarming than a closely cropped head of burnt gold. A pair of very large and very quizzical blue eyes. A slightly tilted nose. A rather small, sensitive mouth.

Appraising what she saw in the glass with the cold, impersonal eye of an introspective 18-year-old, Janet thought:

"Gee! I'm not so tough. I'm better looking than a lot of girls I know. But what does it get me? Fred and Henry are about all I get for excitement and I never saw either one of them in a fever about anything. No excitement! No adventure! No nothing! Why I haven't had one real good kick since I got out of high school."

On the skids and losing ground plenty fast. That was Janet.

If she'd been a philosopher, she'd have known that everything was all set for fate to loose the latch on its jack-in-the-box. But she wasn't; and who wants to be a philosopher with a long beard and a lantern, anyway?

When she re-entered the office, the telephone was ringing madly.

Janet threw a leg over the corner of her desk, leaned on her elbow, and lifted the receiver.

"Peerless Insurance Company. . . . Silence."

"I'm sorry you're having trouble meeting your premium. I'll ask the manager to send you an extension blank. Don't mention it. Good-bye."

The telephone on Miss Miller's desk was ringing now. She crossed the room, sat on the desk, and answered:

"Peerless Insur—. . . Why, you big four-flusher, I thought you were somebody. How are you, Fred? . . . Well, I don't know whether I ought to let you or not. Miss Miller will be back at one-thirty. . . . All right. All right. You sure were cut out for a lawyer. You can come up for ten minutes but not a second longer. See?"

The telephone on her own desk was ringing again.

"Great catfish! Business sure is picking up for a change." She set Miss Miller's phone down none too gently and went back to her own.

"Peerless Insurance. . . . An almost bass voice replied, not unpleasantly: 'Well, well. Is it possible? By the way, do you keep your phone on the roof? I've been ringing half an hour.'"

"Hum!" said Janet, thinking it wasn't a bad voice and wondering what he looked like.

"I beg your pardon?" "Hummm! Hum! Hum!" with increasing emphasis.

"Oh, I see. Well, I was ringing half a minute, anyway. I'd like to speak with Miss Decker."

"I'm her. I mean she. Or maybe it's 'Take your choice.' And very businesslike: 'Could I do something for you?'"

The deep voice said: "I'm speaking for Mr. Tolbert of the Great Eastern Air Transportation Company at Mount Tobe. He wants to engage a stenographer. A friend of yours said he thought you might be able to recommend a girl."

"A friend of mine?" "Yes, by his own admission. Henry Frenda. Works in the office at the airport you know. He is a friend of yours, isn't he?"

"Sure he is," Janet declared. "Henry's a nice boy. And he told you I might help you find a stenographer? Well, listen. I can find you enough stenographers that, laid end to end, would reach from here to somewhere else. But you might not like any of them. Any special requirements?"

"Well, not many," the deep voice replied. "She ought to have a fair amount of ability, of course, and plenty of nerve."

"Hum!" suspiciously. "What kind of nerve?"

"Spunk!" The word fairly crackled. "Mr. Tolbert is president of the Great Eastern and his work takes him on extended flights now and then. You know the sort, modern, peppy, eager for adventure. . . . able to take care of herself in any situation. And . . . apparently as an afterthought, . . . 'preferably good looking.'"

"Hum!" "Well, why not? As a matter of fact, that suggestion comes from Dick Tolbert, Junior, heaven's gift to the ladies. And even with me, there are other considerations than professional competence."

"Whatever that is," said Janet. "What's Tolbert Junior to do with this?"

"Nothing, except that he's a star attraction with your sex. And another thing while we're speaking of attractions. The salary is exceptionally good, more than twice as much, I dare say, as any two stenographers in town earn together."

"Now you said something that even I understand," Janet declared. "I'll need a little time to look around, of course. When did you want her to report?"

"Monday morning," he answered. "Mr. Tolbert's now up in Canada amusing the wild life with a shotgun. He'll be back Sunday."

"All right," Janet promised. "I'll do the best I can. If I can't find a girl, I can't, and that's that. But you call me again tomorrow morning and I'll give you the results."

"That's great," with enthusiasm. "I think my chance has come," she

"My name's Temple. I'll ring before noon tomorrow. And thanks."

Janet waited for him to hang up. But her ear caught no click. After a full minute she said softly: "Hello. . . . A muffled chuckle. 'I just wanted to ask,' he said, 'if I could come up in person tomorrow morning?'"

"Hummm! . . . Why didn't you hang up?" "Why didn't you?"

She banged the receiver on the hook and pushed the phone roughly to one side. "Fresh!" And, irrelevantly: "With that voice he'd just have to be good looking."

JANET pushed her legs out under her desk and relaxed. The time had come for deep thought. But not the opportunity. The plastered head of Fred Turner appeared in the doorway and demanded:

"Where's the old hawk?" "Shut up and come on in. Fred, I'm all worked up and hungry for sympathy. I've been as blue as a yellow dog all day."

Fred sobered. "What about, Jan? Somebody hurt your feelings?"

"I suppose if I say 'yes,' you'll show your affection by murdering whoever it was. Nobody's hurt my feelings, thank you. I've just been doing a lot of thinking and the more I think, the more I'm disgusted with myself. I'm eighteen years old, Fred, and look at me—a stenog in a dinky insurance office!"

"I'm looking at you, Jan," Fred said in a husky voice. "And I don't care whether you're a stenog or the Queen of Sheba, you're the sweetest eyes I ever had. Did you figure you ought to be mayor of the town by now?"

"Fred, I'm serious. Any girl with a fair amount of brains can get ahead in this world. 'Specially if she's half way good looking. I never won a beauty contest, but I've got sense enough to know I could pass in a crowd. And from what I've seen of intelligent people, I must have at least a little brains. But here I sit, doing nothing, getting nowhere, growing old. . . ."

Fred suppressed a smile, and gave her a gentle tap on the back. "Buck up," he said encouragingly. "You're not ready for the junk yard yet. You've sure got the looks, Jan, and you've got more brains than I can match; so why the weeps? If you don't like it here, why don't you get another job?"

"Oh, it's not just the work, Fred. I could have fifty jobs and not be satisfied. I'm just sick of staying in a rut. I want to go places, do things, have a good time in a big way. I want oodles of money, plenty of fine clothes, a place in society, and maybe a handsome, distinguished husband. See?"

Fred said, only too well. "I wish you hadn't said that, Jan," he told her sadly. "It's a swell picture, but it leaves me out in the cold."

Janet slid from the desk and put her white arms about his neck. "No, it doesn't, Fred. I didn't mean it that way. Every girl dreams dreams like that, but they don't hardly ever come true. I was just letting you see what goes on in my mind. Understand, son?"

"Golly, but you're great, Jan." He tried to kiss her, but she leaned back out of reach.

"And here's another thought," she said, putting a forbidding finger on his lips. "Suppose I do want a handsome husband. . . . you're almost handsome and you wanted me bad enough and knew you couldn't have me without doing something big in a better way, you could be distinguished, couldn't you?"

"I'd sure do anything in the world to measure up to what you wanted, Jan. But it's different with a girl. You could get out of here and marry right into everything you want. I'd be an old man before I ever got anywhere."

"Hummm!" said Janet. "You're balking already. You'll never be anybody of importance if you talk like that. You've got to believe in yourself before you can make people sit up and take notice. You've got to be on the lookout for opportunity and grab it when it comes. Understand?"

"I guess so," Fred agreed without enthusiasm. "Are you on the lookout for opportunity, too, Jan?"

Janet leaned against him easily and pretended to adjust his frayed bow tie. "I think my chance has come," she said slowly, as if it was nothing to grow excited over. "I'm thinking about taking a job out at the Mount Tobe airport."

Fred's brows wrinkled ominously. "Who offered it to you, Henry Frenda?"

"Listen," said Janet. "Henry's nothing but a clerk out there, and I wish you'd quit worrying about him anyway. He's a good kid and lots of fun; but that's all. This offer came from somebody that amounts to something. I haven't seen him, but he sounds big over the phone."

"I'll bet Henry's at the bottom of it," Fred insisted.

THE clock on Miss Miller's desk said one twenty-five. Janet saw it and gasped.

"Ye gods! Look at the time," she cried. "Fred, you've got to go. If Miss Miller ever comes in and finds you here, there'll be trouble."

Fred dragged himself from the desk and caught her arms. "We never do have a chance to talk, Jan," he complained. "Can I come out to the house tonight?"

"Henry's coming out tonight, Fred. Now don't get mad. I've been putting him off for weeks. You come out tomorrow night and we'll talk our heads off. Will you?"

"Shucks, I guess I'll have to. But I wish Henry'd take a dive in the river and forget to come up."

Janet swayed toward him until her blonde little head touched his chin. "You've got to go," she whispered. "Hurry!" She slipped her arm about his sturdy young body and as their lips met she closed her eyes and was lost in the ecstasy of his eager embrace.

A sharp penetrating female voice said: "Well!"

They drew apart awkwardly startled, frightened. Miss Miller, the office manager, stood just within the door, chin up, eyes blazing.

"So this is what goes on while I'm at lunch," she said acidly. Janet tried to think of something to say, but discovered she had no voice.

NESHAMINY M. E. CHURCH, HULMEVILLE

This second Methodist edifice in the borough was erected in 1904. The first church of this denomination is still standing at the end of the town, near Newportville, and is used as a summer residence.

Two Church Edifices In Hulmeville Are Symbolic of Years of Service

A mission station of St. James' Church, Bristol, was the Grace Episcopal Church of Hulmeville at one time. In 1826 a Sunday School was organized, and occasionally services were conducted in the old school-house, then located on Trenton avenue. Much enthusiasm was aroused in the summer of 1831 when several interested decided to commence subscription funds for "an Episcopal Church edifice." George Harrison, G. W. Rue and William Johnson were named as trustees. In September of that year the building was started on Main street, and was finished on October 21st, being a plain stone structure 60 by 40 feet. This was consecrated July 3, 1837.

Work of remodeling was started on the edifice in 1866; a two-story Sunday School room was built, and a tower added in 1867. The first rector was a man by the name of Ridgeway. The church property as it stands today is comprised of the church of stone, with a large parish room and upper room of frame at the rear; with rectory of frame on the right, and garage at the rear of the plot. The rectory is said to be about 100 years old, also. For years this church has played an important part in the life of the town.

Tuning in on the Talkies by Walchill

SINCE sound films have brought hands to the screen there is no demand for the old-time three piece orchestra—piano, stool and cover.

"The Fugitive from Marriage" may have intentionally forfeited his bond.

Al Jolson considers the most useless words involved in the talkies are those used to convince a woman against her will.

Frank Fay makes love to three girls "Under a Texas Moon," one of whom is Mona Maris.

Alice White will be "Man Crazy" in her forthcoming First National talkie and the sequel will be "The Widow from Chicago."

"Small Town Sinners" seem to spend Sunday repenting in the big city.

Slang is often based on slight excuse. Why, for instance, call a girl a skirt?

Should Rin Tin Tin require "barkie" theme music, Sorski's "Song of the Flea" is ready-made.

For "Double Feature" Day "Beware of Married Men" "Husbands Are Liars"

Talk About Your Talkies Mishap in type-setting made a film-title read "The Vagabond Liver."

"Seeing Is Believing" but hearing the talk makes the movie more convincing.

"Girls Don't Gamble" may be either a foolish statement or a fruitless warning.

Belle Bennett will be the mother in Warner Bros. "Courage," talkie translation of the stage play.

Criminal Attempt Made To Burn Down Dwelling

A criminal attempt was made Saturday night to burn down a property at 317 Walnut street and had it not been for the quick arrival of the firemen it may have been successful.

When the firemen arrived they found that a screen had been torn off a first floor rear window and then the rear door of the kitchen had been unfastened. Oil had been liberally sprinkled over the shed floor and a fire started.

The oil had thoroughly soaked into the flooring and two five-gallon cans of oil stood in one corner of the room. Had the flames reached these the firemen would have had a very difficult blaze to fight.

Mrs. Green was in the front of the property when the blaze was discovered and became hysterical when informed of the seriousness of the blaze. The damage done is estimated at about $25.

Intoxicated Man Flourishes Loaded Pistol at Kiddies

An intoxicated man flourishing a .32 automatic pistol in the presence of children created considerable excitement on Pond street Saturday afternoon until a police officer arrived.

When taken into custody the man gave his name as Ernest Wallace, Bristol. The gun was found to be loaded and while Wallace, if sober, would not have harmed the children it is difficult to imagine what he might have done with the weapon while under the influence of liquor.

Wallace was taken into custody by the police and given a hearing. He was released in $1,000 bail.

MOTHERS INVITED

Members of the Mothers' Association of Bristol public schools and their friends are invited to attend the meeting for women only, to be held in the Presbyterian Church next Thursday afternoon, April 30, 1930, at 2:30 at which time Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard will talk on "The Mormon Temple Secrets."

PRESENTED WITH PINS

Daughters of America, Bristol Council No. 58, met in F. P. A. hall Friday evening. The meeting was called to order by Occafior Mr. Harry Hinman, who turned the meeting over to Mrs. Gray, national representative. After a few remarks from Mrs. Gray, initiation was held, there being three candidates, and during the evening, Mr. and Mrs. George Vanzant were presented with past council pins. A covered dish social followed the meeting and a pleasant evening was had by all. About seventy-five persons were present, and ten of this number were from Philadelphia.

VISIT HERE

Rev. E. A. Rook, of the Burlington Masonic Home, at one time pastor of the First Baptist Church, here, was a Sunday visitor of S. T. Valentine and daughter, Radcliffe street. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hoscott and two sons, Thomas and Jack, of Philadelphia, formerly of Bristol, were also Sunday callers of the Valentine family.

SCOUTS AT CAMP

A number of Boy Scouts from Troop No. 1, of Bristol Presbyterian Church, spent the week-end at Camp Buccoo.
